When Making Arrangements

Whenever possible, take another person with you when making arrangements to act as your advocate or support. Be clear about your wishes. It is not necessary to review all the available options before making a decision.

Arrangements can be made in advance or after the death has occurred. You may feel less pressured by planning ahead, but there is no 'right' way or time for this.

Pre-Planning may be less expensive. Check with individual funeral homes regarding their practice.

Clarify additional costs that might be incurred after the death (i.e., weekend/evening transfers) that are not covered in the pre-arrangement agreement.

Whatever you decide, ensure you know the total price for all the services you have requested.

Making arrangements without a funeral home

It is legal to make your own arrangements and helpful to pre-plan as much as possible. If you choose this, advance planning is essential.

Funeral Homes require:

- Social Insurance Number, Birth Certificate and Care Card number of the deceased.
- Vital statistics: name, place of death, residency, marital status, occupation, birth date, birthplace, birth name, father, mother, type of disposition.
- Medical Certificate of Death (comes from the physician or registered nurse).
- Clothing, as wished.

death certificate. If you need multiple copies be sure to ask for them. The funeral home then registers the death with Vital Statistics.
